

Editor's note

For our last issue for 2019, we have a full series of articles with two excellent review articles on “Gastrointestinal complications of chronic pancreatitis” and a review on the clinical approach to ileocecal thickening, a very timely and relevant topic with the increase in inflammatory bowel disease in the Asian Pacific region. We have 10 original scientific articles covering a broad range of topics in gastrointestinal and liver diseases and five case reports.

The editors' meeting will be held in Kolkata in the middle of December 2019. This will give us the opportunity to review our progress and make plans for the new year 2020. The journal is now more than 2 years old, with the first issue published in September 2017.

Wiley has provided us with incredible editorial support in this period of time as the editors continue to work hard to try to achieve International Scientific Indexing (ISI) citation in 2020.
